Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 430 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.9in. Excerpt from Harpers Pictorial Library of the World War, Vol. 9 of 12: War Makers and Peace Makers; Character Studies of the Leading Actors in the Conflict. The great war was a conflict of ideas. Back of the men and munitions, the armies and navies of the Allies and of the Central Powers, there were the directing and controlling personalities who won and lost for their causes. It was a contest of wits, mind challenging mind, will against will. Natural resources and equipment were essential, but nevertheless secondary to the wise intelligence capable of using them so as to serve its cleverly conceived purposes, and sustained in every crisis by a spirit which, conscious of the power and promise of its cause, never lost faith in its will to conquer. Therefore it is peculiarly fitting that the American people, particularly the youth of the coming generation, should have at hand a dependable record of the lives and character of those conspicuous figures whose names will be forever intimately associated with this war which has shaken the very foundations of the world, and, as we confidently believe, marks the beginning of a new heaven and a new earth. The brief biographies of these men are a revelation of their character, their temperament, their struggle, of their defeats and their victories, their perseverance in the preliminary tests of the temper of their spirits all preparatory to the great crises, in which they proved their power, as leaders of their people and saviors of the world's civilization. To understand fully the significance of the lives of the victors, it is necessary to recognize by contrast also the defects and shortcomings of their foes. Consequently, a...
