Not illustrated. 1866 Excerpt: .on the margin of the last page, to which I refer the reader. The regular Dlwan is preceded by a long introduction containing an immense mass of profound learning, among other things a solution of the famous problem on the Duplication of the Cube, by Aflatun. In one important step the construction of the problem is Mechanical, not Geometrical, which last I am afraid it never will be. In other respects, however, the solution is extremely ingenious, and strictly in conformity with the elements of Euclid. The work is in the highest state of preservation, written on fine paper, at least three centuries old, with margins richly and tastefully ruled. The outer margin also consists of very fine paper abounding in notes and explanations, beautifully written, both in Naskhl and Ta llk. Altogether it is a very unique and valuable MS., and I venture to say...
