Excerpt from Remarks on the Character and Writings of Hahnemann The founder of Homeopathy was born in Saxony, in the year 1755, and received the degree of M D., at Erlangen; after which he resided for some time at Gommern, where he occupied himself in translating works from the English, French, and Italian languages into German. It is not claimed that he had any medical practice, although he held himself in readiness for the discharge of professional duties; but after his nostrums failed, he abandoned all idea of practice, because, he said, it afforded no great principle by which he could, in all cases, guide his course. It would not be uncharitable to believe, that he might have been actuated by other motives for he could not have been ignorant, that the physician has to deal with psychological facts, involving the idea of life, which, constantly varying, cannot be subjected to a system of the same rigid experimentalism as physical phenomena, and cannot, therefore, furnish the same definite laws. In 1790, Hahnemann claims to have discovered the similia similibus principle, while translating Collins Materia Medica, by experimenting on himself, with cinchona bark, which, he says. Produced all the symptoms of intermittent fever; although similar trials since made with the same medicine have uniformly failed in causing the same results. In 1796, he published his first dissertation on homeopathy in Hufeland's Journal. In 1805, he brought out a treatise on the virtues of medicines, and in 1810, the Organon appeared. In 1811, he commenced to teach his system in Leipsic, and is said to have performed the experiments on himself and pupils, which formed the basis of...
